Excerpt: .Nor had he far to search the cause t explain: A small sailboat before his anxious eyes Lay upturned near the shore, and to it clung A maiden fair. When past his first surprise, Forthwith into the royal stream he sprung, For he could breast the waves with grace and ease, And soon rescued the maiden, fair and young--Minnette! She was a picture neath the trees--The silent monarchs of the forest wild, As gently fanned her brow the friendly breeze--As on the gallant Dukalon she smiled, Murmuring her gratitude in words so sweet, So low, his wildly throbbing pulse was thrilled Beyond control. All drenched from head to feet, The snow-white drapery clinging to her form, She stood erect, pale as a driven sheet, Straight as a willow, with eyes that could disarm--Such sympathy, such passion, they proclaimed--The prince of skeptics by their witching charm....
