Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Edmund Joyce Smith is a man who wears many hats, often superimposed upon one another, to comic effect. His work by day is as a clinical social worker with children and their families in Hartford. He also enjoys working as a domestic violence prevention counselor. When he isn't doing these jobs, his energies are devoted to friends, family, and creative pursuits. Writer, musician, madcap folk artist, Mr. Smith's passions inscribe a whirl of activity, out of which has now come, Lastly, I Wish to Mention, and plans for multiple books and musical releases that are in the works. The guiding principle that informs his unique approach to the arts he summarizes thus: Each of life's broken pieces have the character of stained glass, through which our radiances show themselves. If you would like to contact Mr. Smith regarding his work or to propose creative projects on your own behalf, he can be reached at You may also look for his growing corpus of material on Tumblr and his own Amazon Web Page.
