The Land of Little Care
Come, little comrade, let us fare across the hills beyond the city, And loiter in the open where no voice may call to us for pity; We'll wade in brooks and wander by the slanting fields and forest edges, And listen to the winds that sigh and sing through aromatic sedges. We'll linger in the hawtree's shade, and carve the letters of our names On mossy fences that were made by hands which toil no longer claims; The golden willow's branch shall be a whistle you may blithely blow And every pool shall be a sea where stately vessels come and go. I'll lead you where the valleys lie deep in the morning's gleaming dew; The Crabtree's fragrant blossoms I will pluck from thorny boughs for you, About the Publisher

It is in a single of the best book. This is for those who state there had not been a well worth reading through. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
