Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 224 x 150 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Rats is vermin, they need to be destroyed - and their fleas too! The Rookeries, Leicester, 1851. The Irish dominance of recent years has crumbled following the hanging of the depraved Dubh O Donnell and his henchman. For Head Constable Robert Charters and his fifty Constables and Sergeants of the Leicester Borough Police, the power struggle for a new top dog within the overcrowded, narrow and fetid streets and alleyways has placed them in daily conflict with the ever increasing number of gangs. This is particularly so of the incomers, fresh up from the Rookeries of St Giles, London and their former lair, the Rats Castle. Open warfare on the streets of Victorian Leicester? Who can bring the struggle to an end and by what means? This is the second book in the series and a further chance to meet Samson Shepherd, John Beddows, Tanky Smith, Black Tommy Haynes and their colleagues in The Borough Boys . This is a novella, and covers events in Victorian Leicester in the year 1851. Two further novellas covering 1852 and 1853 will be available later this year, before the next full novel covering 1854/5 is released. This is a the second story in the series - another tale of England at its worst. A time that meant wealth and greed to many and poverty, illness and death to many more. Industrial towns were attracting thousands of incomers from Ireland and the traditional county industries, with the expectation of new jobs and better conditions. Leicester went from a stunning medieval town to a dark, sooty, acrid, septic cesspit of industry and its people suffered. Those that became rich moved from the...
