Let us rejoice in the return of that bright luminary whose beams now gild the spires of our populous city. There are many days in the brief career of our state worthy to be remembered; but the commemoration of this day ought never to be omitted, for it marks the beginning of the history of Ohio. Here, where we are surrounded by all the luxuries and refinements of an advanced civilization; where science and taste have come to adorn and beautify life; where at every moment we may hear the loud pulsations of the mightiest power man has ever subjugated, as it bears to our shores the products of every clime; whence we may look forth and behold the green fields of our native land, dotted with thriving villages and populous cities; whence there rises the hum of a busy, prosperous, free and happy people.
