The Right Triangle, or right-angled triangle, has two of its sides meeting at right angles, as shown in Fig. 83. The side opposite RIGHT TRIANGLE ACUTE TRIANGLE OBTUSE TRIANGLE Fio. 83. Fig. 84. Fig. 85. the right angle is called the Hypotenuse. The relation between its sides gives us one of the most useful laws of mathematics; namely, the square of the hypotenuse is equal to the sum of the squares of the other two sides. In Fig. 83, $c^2 = a^2 + b^2$. This relation is useful in calculating the lengths of diagonal distances and in laying out right angles by the use of three numbers having the relation, such as 3, 4, and 5. This law is often called the Pythagorean theorem, from Pythagoras, the ancient Greek philosopher who discovered it. It must be remembered that this relation is true only for a right triangle. If all of the angles of a triangle are acute angles, as in Fig. 84, the triangle may be called an Acute Triangle. If one of the angles of a triangle is an obtuse angle, as in Fig. 85, the triangle may be called an Obtuse Triangle. When a triangle has two of its sides equal, as shown in Fig. 86, the triangle is called an Isosceles Triangle. The angles opposite these sides are also equal; in Fig. 86 $\angle CAB = \angle CBA$. When a triangle has all three sides equal, the triangle is called...
