I shall speak without much regard to the danger of being dry or abstruse, but will endeavor, as far as in me lies, to present thoughts which will be, at least in some degree, commensurate with the importance of the occasion. I shall not hesitate to reiterate some statements to which I have previously called attention, but which can hardly be too often presented. I shall spare you statistics as much as possible: they will be found in the notes if this address is published. The purpose of this Fair is instruction in the application of science to the useful arts. In what manner and to what extent this purpose may yet be developed, depends upon the way in which it is sustained by exhibitors and by the public. Its method is to bring annually into public notice all the recent improvements in machinery, tools, and appliances, to which the inventors, promoters, or owners desire to call attention, with a view to their general introduction. Its medal is a dollar, earned in recompense for a service rendered. It is based upon the simple...
