Bibliogov, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 246 x 189 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Roughly a month after taking command of Bravo Company, 302nd Military Intelligence Battalion (Tactical Exploitation System) in November 2002, Major Art La Flamme received his deployment order and, by January, was at Ahmed Al Jaber Airbase in Kuwait preparing to provide the exploitation of theater and national capabilities in support of V Corps requirements for what soon became Operation Iraqi Freedom. This included direct U2 downlink and processing signals, electronic and communications intelligence. As La Flamme explained, he operated under the information sharing credo of, Shove it down their throats. His company would thus find any and every way to ramp up the system s capabilities and those of the soldiers, put it all together in useful analysis and get it to anybody and everybody who could use it which involved jumping deep into bed with the Air Force a subject he discusses at length. We were doing dynamic, on-the-fly retraining of soldiers he said, to try to develop, teach and implement a way of using an Army corps-level asset and national and theater collection platforms to speed...
